The High Road Academy of Washington, DC, is a specialized alternative education school for high school-aged students facing broad-based learning disabilities. In our parent company's 20+ year history, we've amassed vast experience and unparalleled expertise in successfully reaching and teaching this particular student population by identifying individual strengths and aptitudes, then delivering one-on-one personalized instruction that comprehensively addresses specific needs and interactively engages each student.

Our program offers two tracks: The Diploma Track requires students to complete 24 Carnegie Units to receive a high school diploma; the Certificate Track concentrates on core academics and a variety of transitional school-to-work programs to best equip young adults for gainful employment and self-sufficient lives following graduation. Regardless of each student's individualized education plan, all students receive related and supplementary services — like speech/language therapy, occupational therapy, and individual/group counseling — as needed, and all benefit from such program features as field trips, guest speakers, special events, and on-site job experiences.

Ultimately, all of the High Road Schools and Academies share one common cause: to educate one child at a time. In so doing, we aim to teach them the rewards of learning, build the self-esteem and confidence that grows out of personal and academic success, and prepare them for responsible, productive, and fulfilling futures in all facets of their lives — in school, at home, and in the community.
